Paris, April 13, 1791.

LEXINGTON, May 21.

A Correspondent observes, that notwithstanding the unfavourable account given of the conduct of the militia on the last expedition, there are not less than 1095 volunteers who have actually taken the field, under the command of Brigadier General Scott, against the Indians; and who marched from Frankfort on Tuesday last—the place of their destination is not certainly known, but there is not the smallest shadow of doubt, but they will return crowned with laurels, as the men are not only in high spirits, but generally known to be brave, and have the highest confidence in their officers.
